Overscore

Overscore in a signature is a way of hiding some issues about self from public. The person using an underscore in the signature hides much about himself. His success is low.

Encircling

Encircling, partial or complete, is hiding about self from public like the overscore. In addition to that, here we also observe that the size of the signature has been inflated due to the addition of the encircling. This person has something to hide but he wants to portray that he is larger than what he actually is.

11PLACEMENT OF DOTS*Placement of two dots below the underscore

Placement of two dots below the underscore shows with whom this person would like to spend his free or leisure time. For example: weekends, vacations, New Year's Eve, etc.

Two dots at the left under the signature shows that the person prefers to spend his leisure time with his close family.

B*Centre

Two dots at the centre below the signature means that this person prefers to spend his free or leisure time with his close friends.

Extreme right

Two dots at the right under the signature shows that the person prefers to spend his leisure time with strangers.

2. One dot at the end of the signature:

The person who puts a dot at the end of the signature is very definitive and decisive. He is particular about many small things. He is easily irritable if these small things are not in place.

3. More than two dots in the signature:

If a person puts more than two dots randomly anywhere in the signature, then it shows waste of time. Two dots means a specific time meant for leisure but more than that is wastage of time. This person feels that he has wasted valuable time in his life.

Placement of these more than two dots in various zones would let you know what kind of activities are considered time wasters by him. For example if the person is putting three random dots in the upper zone he is wasting time in intellectually involving activities.
