INDIVIDUALITY

First name:

The first name in the signature represents the individuality of the person. The subconscious mind has been trained to identify self by the name. The name elicits a specific thought of individuality in the mind. Every person would associate his first name to himself as an individual.

In a family, the first name is used to identify the individual. When your mother calls you by your first name you know that she is talking to you and not anyone else in the family. The first name creates a strong association in the mind with the individuality. So the first name or its part in the signature represents the individual.

The word 'Individual' means an indivisible entity. As an individual you have your own likes, dislikes, beliefs etc. Your self-expression is your identity as an individual. When your mother calls you by your first name you know that she is talking to you and not anyone else in the family. The first name creates a strong association in the mind with the individuality. As a child grows up he has his likes, dislikes, cravings, fears, preferences, beliefs, principles, dreams, ambitions etc. All these qualities can be collectively called as the individuality of the person.

When one includes his first name in the signature he is giving a representation to his individuality in his public image. It is as if he is saying that I am a distinct person who has an indivisible identity.
